Key market trends: Local & Global Challenges

Demographic, organization and resourcing issues are radically changing the global healthcare industry. Rising costs and demands have strained capacity at new levels of urgency

Strides in artificial intelligence are showing great potential for a total overhaul of healthcare delivery, especially with regards to optimizing operations, better care experiences and improved access for patients. But achieving these goals will take more than merely supplying hospitals with additional technology. A complete reinvention of the healthcare delivery system, with digital health technology at its core.

The successful implementation of this new approach would also address the shortage of healthcare professionals and strained team capacities. Major healthcare providers are also looking into boosting practitioner's productivity by reconfiguring task distribution to enable them to focus on top-of-license tasks, while non-expertise tasks can be allocated to other colleagues or machines.

The healthcare industry stands on the brink of significant transformation.

Let's rise to the challenge together.
